

What, if anything, makes humans unique?

Join us for cocktail hour, dinner, science quiz (with prizes!), and presentation by Yale Lecturer Mark Sheskin at the

Darwin Day Dinner

10th Annual !! Saturday, February 10, 2018

There are many ideas about what, if anything, might make humans very different from other animals. Possibilities include language, general intelligence, cumulative culture, and large-scale cooperation. Sheskin will discuss how humans compare to other animals in each of these domains. Along the way, he will describe research with many species, including humans, chimpanzees, dogs, capuchin monkeys, and crows.

Mark Sheskin is a researcher and lecturer in Cognitive Science at Yale University. He studies the evolution of morality, and his research has included projects with adults, children, and capuchin monkeys. Previously Mark was a researcher at École Normale Supérieure in Paris, and before that a doctoral student in Developmental Psychology at Yale.
